

Chrysoula Skorditi was born in Epanomi, Thessaloniki. Her family were fishermen and farmers. From a young age she loved nature, since her life was near the sea and in the field. She finished high school and unfortunately due to health issues she missed the exams for the University. Thus, she ended the school of accountants and secretaries. She worked as an assistant accountant for a year and after passing exams she got a license to sign third category books. She is married and mother of two children. She worked for six years in an insurance company and resigned to work on their estate, located in the area of Metochi Epanomi. They made a turn to integrated cultivation and for 25 years now they are cultivating organically. She has been a member of political, social and trade unions related with her place of work and for the last 10 years she has been the president of the Union of Organic Farmers of Northern Greece. He conserves local seeds and dreams of a world where people will live in harmony with nature.
